

101 Things for the Housewife to Do in 1949

This reissue of the classic guide for the 1949 housewife was originally published in post-war Britain, and its lasting appeal and fascination have endured through the years. Although the wartime emphasis on making do is paramount, we see glimpses of a new world of luxury with Washing and Ironing with Electricity and Making a Modern Divan Bed. Advice on every aspect of the housewife's life is given, from managing household chores to finding useful hobbies to pass the time. Arranging menus, basketry, leatherwork, care of the complexion and hair, and building a hat wardrobe are all covered in this delightful look at the past. These 50 suggestions are funny and charming, but all provide a fantastic insight into a woman's life and aspirations after the watershed of the war.
